

David C. Hall has served the non-profit world for nearly twenty years. David works at the national headquarters of the American Humane Association where he is creating a new planned giving program. Previously, He was Senior Director of Planned Giving for The Salvation Army, directing planned giving operation throughout a multi-state area. Before concentrating on gift planning, he spent the majority of his career serving as Chief Development Officer.

David also draws from experience in the business community and as a military officer.

He was a sales representative for a Fortune 40 corporation, ran his own oil and gas related business for several years, and served as an officer U. S. Air Force flying reconnaissance and air refueling missions.

David and his wife Dodie have four children, four grandchildren and an obnoxious cat. He enjoys a variety of adventures, including wilderness canoe trips to Canada, riding his motorcycle and piloting small planes.